

REPORT ON BUSINESS

THE GLOBE AND MAIL

Tick contents

Gord Nixon
in Barbara

NOVEMBER 2004

Jimmy Molloy in contrast, is eager and friendly. "I don't perceive myself as a superstar real estate agent," he says. "When people are finished dealing with me, they feel good about the process. I'm trying to make them feel like they're the star, their house is the star. That is what matters."

- Trevor Cole, Globe and Mail

FEATURES

28 TOUGH ENOUGH?

After three years of smooth talk, Royal Bank CEO Gord Nixon has taken brutal action to deal with a U.S. expansion gone very wrong. Will it be enough to satisfy spoiled shareholders?
BY DEREK DECLOET

42 FINDING MONEY ON THE STREET

The push to sort and recycle more garbage is very smelly work indeed. It's also creating business opportunities — profitable ones
BY MARTIN PATRIQUIN

54 RICH PEOPLE WILL BUY HUGE EXPENSIVE HOUSES EVEN IF THEY HATE THEM

Learn this and 15 other lessons in luxury real estate sales from Toronto's agents for the rich and even richer
BY TREVOR COLE

74 THE SECRETS OF MY SUCCESS

Mid-interview naps, bogus manuscripts, acting like a Commie — how a pioneering journalist got the Establishment to spill the goods
BY PETER C. NEWMAN

54

EXECUTIVE MBA GUIDE

87 HARD LESSONS EMBA programs have themselves become a competitive business, and they're facing a stark predicament: too many schools chasing the same customers
BY CHRISTOPHER SHULGAN AND KEVIN SIU

BRAGGING RIGHTS A lighthearted selection of awards, from best bang for the buck to most repentant professor PERKS Foie gras? Couples therapy? A body polish? Now that free laptops and catered lunches are de rigueur, schools have to keep offering more
EXECUTIVE SUMMARY All the key data on each program, including cost, duration and, yes, even attendance requirements

87

